Critical Staffing Risk

Critical staffing pressure occurs when available staffing falls below the level required to maintain planned operational capacity safely and effectively.

Indicators may include high unfilled shifts, increased sickness absence, unexpected specialist-role gaps, dependency on temporary staffing and repeated short-notice rota changes.

Staffing pressure should be assessed alongside service demand and operational risk.

Contingency Actions

Operational leadership should review redeployment options, temporary staffing arrangements, service prioritisation, escalation routes and the impact of staffing shortages on capacity.

Significant decisions should be documented and reviewed.

This contingency procedure complements the Workforce Escalation Procedure but focuses specifically on critical short-term staffing resilience.
